

History major,

After completing degree, figure out from there, don't mind teaching history, or work in the museum, teach something, anything history related

Employed - restaurant jobs, office jobs - word of mouth(friends, family members, walk in), but have used indeed, job search forms, google search engines

Depending on what he's looking for - don't always have a set list of jobs

- How important the job is
- If just part time job, just walk in interview
- Use spreadsheet or word docu if applying for important job positions

Prefer word document

Info - position, company name, not day, but month or make a mental note

Work values - friendly, places that value your personal character, respectful

- ex) decent, flexible but no one would want to work there if there's no respect in people
- Other jobs: everyone nice, friendly, help each other -> even if the work is hard, he would still choose this job over other jobs
- Having good working synergy is good

Don't like with the current job boards - not updated more often, no updates on ads, scam job postings,

- Reach out to companies

Need to follow up with the companies more often

Right now is efficient - but nicer to set up something more personal besides the job description

- Want some human interaction with the job searching process instead of seeing 100 lines of job descriptions

The problem/inconvenience: Own problem - busy with school and work schedule so doesn't get to apply or update his list often

No replies => reason why he keeps a list to have a sense of where he applied to bc he can forget filter : willing to work with students

- For part-time jobs
