1. Tester: Arrange the filters: put the ones that are used more frequently in the front
2. Tester: Confused on where to find "search" after selecting filters
3. Tester: Would want to straight apply the search from the filters
4. Me: possible solution: add an "apply" button so that the user doesn't have to use search bar when they use filters function
5. Tester: Compliment: I like the way how the "Filters" is organized and shown in this page - it allows me to easily find it at a glance
6. Tester: Maybe write "Quick Search" rather than just "Search"
7. Tester: Compliment: I think it is good to have an apply button on the bottom instead of on the top, because the user will be scrolling all the way to the bottom if they meet the job description and if they are highly interested in this position.
8. Tester: compliment: I really like the idea of having a home button in the middle rather than located as the first one -> sticks out and easier to navigate
9. Tester: Would desire a specific guide on the "Settings" page, because most of the older people don't know which one to press and what to find from the settings page
10. Me: possible solution: have a guide/tips inside the animated text balloons. Have an option to skip for younger age groups. With this specific guide, the older age groups can easily follow the steps on how to change the preferences on the settings page.
11. Tester: I think you can keep the visibility settings inside the settings page, but I would want to control them directly on the bio page
12. Me: possible solution: have like a one-click mark to control the visibility status
13. Tester: had a hard time finding where to update my resume. Could you add a word "update" so that I can read "Profile/Documents update" on the home page?
14. Tester: Instead of clicking the words, I think having an "update" button next to it will make easier to spot
15. Tester: Compliment: I really like the idea about this automated job tracker. I also like how you can refresh by clicking the rotation button.
16. Tester: I believe it is fine to keep the notification settings in the settings page, but for older people like myself automatically find this job tracker page when I try to change the preference. I think there is a tendency that older people try to avoid the settings page, so I think it would be nice to have the notification control to be on this page as well
17. Tester: compliment: I can easily follow the flow of this product, especially with the cancel button and the back button on the job description page.
